NOTICE

June 1, 2004

Over the past several months, Roosevelt Water Conservation District (RWCD) has experienced a severe decline in the quality and timeliness of design review as it relates to our facilities when those designs are produced by third parties.

As such, effective June 1, 2004, RWCD will design and produce plans for any work affecting RWCD facilities. This change affects both private and municipal projects.

This change will affect the design review in the following manner. The optional pre-application meeting for any project affecting RWCD facilities will now be mandatory. From that meeting, RWCD will determine a scope of work for the project and provide an estimate of cost associated with engineering and design. At the time formal engineering and design is required, RWCD will collect in full the amount estimated for this purpose. This "Engineering & Design Fee" will be in addition to the RWCD administrative fee collected on all projects. For example, if it is determined by RWCD that the Engineering & Design Fee for a 80 acre parcel will be $3,000, RWCD will collect from the appropriate party a total fee of $5,500 prior to formal review of that project (that is $3,000 for the engineering/design, and $2,500 for the administrative fee).

It is anticipated this change will provide a more cost effective and timely approval process for all projects involving RWCD facilities.

This change does not affect in any way, shape or form the policies set in place for Crossing Permits, Dry Up Permits or Water Permits.

Please contact Shane M. Leonard, Associate General Manager, Irrigation Works, at (480) 988-9586 with any questions or comments. He can also be reached by email at rwcd@earthlink.net.
